Topics for discussion will include: consumer rights surrounding utility services, energy and water assistance programming, and the intersection between housing equity and utility security for vulnerable and historically-underserved consumers and their communities. Participants will learn about protections from housing discrimination, how past discriminatory practices impact Pennsylvanians today, and how we can advance housing equity today. Participants will also engage in a discussion related to utility and housing access for vulnerable populations, including survivors of domestic violence, limited English proficient individuals, and immigrants.
